Harvard Law Professors Urge Congress to Support International Adoption

34 Harvard Law School faculty members and 24 faculty from Boston College Law School have signed a letter urging the U.S. Congress to support the core principles in the pending legislation known as CHIFF (Children in Families First), S. 1530 and H.R. 3323.

Those core principles include: recognition of a child's fundamental human right to a nurturing permanent family; commitment by the U.S. government to vindicate that right; and recognition that children's interests are generally best served by early placement in permanent nurturing families.

In addition, CHIFF states that priority should be put on adoption whether domestic or international, when reunifying children with their parent of origin is not possible or appropriate. Priority for domestic over international adoption should be pursued through concurrent planning, so that if domestic adoptive homes are not quickly available, children are placed in international adoptive homes.

"This legislation is truly the light at the end of a long tunnel of despair," said Elizabeth Bartholet, faculty director of the Child Advocacy Program at Harvard Law School and the Morris Wasserstein Professor of Law at HLS. "The numbers of international adoptions have dropped precipitously since 2004, which means that some 20,000 unparented children per year who used to find good homes in adoption are now left to languish in institutions."

Bartholet said that she was thrilled so many members of the Harvard Law Faculty have joined in support of the legislation. "The 34 members signing cross the political spectrum, and include noted scholars in human rights, child rights, civil rights, race relations, Islamic law, international law, poverty law and constitutional law," she said.

She said she was also pleased that such a large number and diverse range of distinguished experts from the Boston College Law School Faculty signed the letter.

"This is a human rights tragedy of enormous proportions," Bartholet said. "The U.S. government has cooperated with UNICEF and others in causing the tragedy. This legislation is designed to change U.S. policy dramatically."

The text of the letter and the signers from both law schools appear below.

February 5, 2014

To the Members of the Congress of the United States:

We the undersigned members of the Faculties of Harvard Law School and Boston College Law School write to indicate our support for the following core principles incorporated in the pending legislation known as CHIFF (Children in Families First), S. 1530 and H.R. 3323:

1. Recognition of the child's fundamental human right to a nurturing permanent family;
2. Commitment by the U.S. government to vindication of that right; and
3. Recognition that children's interests are generally best served by early placement in permanent nurturing families, and accordingly that:
  - a) Priority should be put on reunifying children with their parents of origin and, where that is not possible or appropriate, on placing children in adoptive homes;
  - b) Priority for domestic over international adoption should be pursued through concurrent planning, so that if domestic adoptive homes are not quickly available, children are placed in available international adoptive homes.

Sincerely,

Harvard Law School Faculty Members
