3. Corpus juris civilis: Codex cum glossis et tabula.

Manuscript on vellum, written ca. 1275, with nine historiated miniatures and 500 illuminated grotesque initials.

Soon after his accession in 518, Justinian appointed a commission to collect and codify existing Roman law. A second commission, headed by the jurist Tribonian, was appointed in 530 to select matter of permanent value from the works of the jurists, to edit it and to arrange it into 50 books. In 533 this commission produced the Digesta. The same year saw the publication of the four books of the Institutiones, an introductory textbook of Roman law. In 534 the Commission published the Codex Justinianoi, a compilation of material from imperial decisions and enactments. These three works, along with the Novellae, a collection of laws promulgated after the Codex, constitute the Corpus juris civilis, the source of law and judicial reasoning for much of Europe from the 12th century onwards.

The Codex comprises the codification of Roman law under Justinian. Book V, title I of the Codex (displayed here) addresses betrothal, betrothal pledges, and marriage brokers; the first two laws of this title make clear how much independence of action Roman law granted women in contracting marriage.

1. She who is already betrothed to one man is not forbidden to break her contract, and marry another.
2. If a man should, while residing in the same province agree to marry a young woman and fail to do so within the term of two years, and the woman, after the expiration of the said time, should afterwards form a union with another, she will not be guilty of fraud who, by contracting marriage, did no longer suffer her vows to be treated with contempt.

The Law School's Manuscript 63 is important for both its later marginal notes and its many illustrations, remarkable examples of 13th century Anglo-French art.

4. Gratian, 12th cent.

Decretum, ?late 12th century.

Manuscript on vellum, probably written in England perhaps in the late 12th century. Folio 1 is missing. It is now thought that there were two ‘recensions’ of this work, one that may date from the early 1130s, the other from the late 1140s. This manuscript is thought to be transitional between the two recensions. It contains an early set of glosses. A ‘working edition’ of the first recension may be found at <https://gratian.org/first-recension-working-edition>, to which this manuscript still needs to be compared.

12. Henry de Bracton, ca. 1210-1268.

De legibus Angliae.

Bound manuscript on vellum, written about 1390.

The outstanding common-law treatise of the Middle Ages, Bracton's De legibus is remarkable for its use of actual court decisions for illustrative purposes. Most of the text was apparently written by a number of authors in the 1220s and 1230s, and updated between then and the 1250s. The last person to own and work on the original manuscript was probably Bracton, then a judge of the King's Bench.

There are approximately 49 surviving manuscripts of Bracton, many fragmentary or abridged. All date from the c14 or very late c13, and none is closer than third generation from the original.

The Harvard Law School copy displayed here (HLS MS 2) reflects a different version of the text than that printed by Tottel in 1569 and has no known provenance. But it features numerous marginalia relating to cases brought in Devonshire and also some words and phrases in an Old English dialect; it may therefore come from the west of England. Some of the marginalia are accompanied by whimsical drawings, and the text has been carefully rubricated with illuminated borders and initials, as well as ornaments in blue and red ink.

13. Custumal of Normandy.

Summa de legibus Normanniae, also known as the Grand Coutumier de Normandie, in Latin with some parts in French, [probably Normandy, possibly England, c. 1300]. Manuscript on vellum, 127 leaves

The Summa de legibus Normanniae is a manuscript treatise written in Latin that describes customary law in Normandy in the twelfth and thirteenth centuries. Numbering 127 leaves and containing nearly 130 "chapters" on legal rights, our newly acquired copy sets forth regulations on such topics as marriage, land ownership, finance, trading, the Crusades, trials by combat, outlaws, and military service. One section (folio 45r) even addresses a legal issue arising from too much snow!

De Dilatatione per Nivem.

Si vero visio alicuius terrae sit assignata, et terra per nivem vel pluviarum superabundantiam fuerit occultata, visio et alia querela ad alium terminum sunt prorogandae, cum, nive vel pluviis consumptis, terra fuerit detecta.

Of Delay by Snow

If, at the assigned view of any land, the land should be covered by a superabundance of snow or rain, the view and the complaint are delayed to another term until, with the snow or rain dissipated, the land is uncovered. (J. A. Everard, p. 220)

A compilation made in Normandy in the second quarter of the thirteenth century, the Liber Consuetudinis Normanniae is an important record of legal practice in feudal Normandy and Norman England:

It was not a complete law code, but a sophisticated, even scientific, treatise on the customary law of Normandy, both civil and criminal, from the perspective of procedural law; legal rights are defined by the procedure for their enforcement, and wrongs are put right with justice and equity. (J. A. Everard, p. xv)

It is also a foundation document in the history of the common law, as Norman law influenced the law of England between the Conquest in 1066 and 1203, when the French crown regained Normandy proper. The Channel Islands, the British Crown Dependencies in the English Channel just off the Normandy coast, to this day retain the Liber Consuetudinis Normanniae as a principal source of its primary law.

In its medieval French translation, entitled Grand Coutumier de Normandie, the work became one of the aristocratic texts of the late Middle Ages: three copies were illuminated for the French royal library, for example. First printed in Paris in 1483, editions were published well into the eighteenth century. (The Library has an outstanding collection of these, with more than sixty printed editions.) The principal modern editions are by W. L. De Gruchy, Jersey, 1881; by E. J. Tardif, Coutumiers de normandie, 3 vols., 1881-1903, and by J. A. Everard, Le Grand Coutumier de Normandie, 2009.

15. Lille (France)

Coustumes de la ville et eschevinage de Lille, 1579

The customal of Lille, which in this period was not part of France but was in the Burgundian Netherlands, has origins that go back to the thirteenth century. Manuscripts are known from as early as the fourteenth century. By the sixteenth century it had been divided into two parts, one of which dealt largely with procedural issues before the court in the city itself and the other of which dealt more broadly with customs of the region in and around the city. Both customals were printed in the first half of the sixteenth century (the HLS Library holds three copies of one and one of the other), but the lawyers in Lille were still working in manuscript. This recently acquired manuscript contains both customals. It awaits analysis.

18. Nuremberg. Newe Reformacion.

Nuremberg : Anton Koberger, 1484

The spread of type in the late 15th and early 16th centuries coincided with movements in European cities to reform and codify local laws. Often the first book printed in a city was a collection of local laws and ordinances. The city of Nuremberg's laws were first printed in 1484 by Anton Koberger. The hand-colored woodcut, which shows the Nuremberg city arms flanked by St. James the Greater and St. Lawrence, is the work of the local artist Michael Wohlgemut (1434-1519). Primarily a painter, Wohlgemut produced woodcuts for book illustration and ran a studio. Among his students was Albrecht Dürer, who would illustrate later editions of Nuremberg's laws, as seen in the next book.

19. Nuremberg.

Reformacion der Stat.

Nuremberg: Friedrich Peypus, 1522

Peypus printed three editions of the laws of the city of Nuremberg from 1521-22. This woodcut of "Sancta Iusticia", dated 1521, appears in all three editions. Although it lacks his cipher device, it is the work of Albrecht Dürer. Dürer was a pupil of Michael Wohlgemut and learned wood engraving, as well as painting, in the older artist's workshop. A single generation, only 37 years, separates Dürer's woodcut from the work of his teacher displayed in the previous book.
