FAQs

But what do GGL Reps actually DO?

Life as a GGL Rep varies a lot from week to week, but responsibilities include hosting study breaks, tabling in the Hark, developing and sending e-mails to dorm residents, attending bi-weekly meetings, and helping out with preparation for campaigns and events. GGL Reps provide feedback to the HLS Sustainability Coordinator, helping to identify barriers to student conservation and suggesting ways to improve policies and structures. There will also be opportunities for Reps to develop and implement independent dorm or HLS-wide sustainability projects of their own choosing.

What if I'm not going to live in an HLS dorm next year?

Although it's helpful to be able to connect with peers as a fellow dorm resident, living in a dorm is not a prerequisite for applying. If the one thing giving you pause is your location for next year, still apply—it's far more important to be interested in engaging with students on green living issues than to be conveniently located.

What if I am concerned that I won't always be able to devote 3 hours a week to this job?

Reps will not be expected to work more than 3 hours a week, and there will be weeks when fewer hours are assigned, often in conjunction with particularly work intensive periods in a semester. Outside of events, much of the work of being a GGL REP is done on one's own time.

What is the start date for this job? End date?

Rep responsibilities will officially start the first week of classes, and will continue until the beginning of exam period. Reps will also have the option to work during new student orientation and through commencement, if interested.
