

“Labor in the Information Age,” a special issue of *Labor History

Labor History*, regarded by many as “the pre-eminent journal for historical scholarship on labor,” has begun its fifty-first year of publication with a special issue on “Labor in the Information Age” (February 2010, vol 51, no. 1). Featuring articles on the alleged rise of “the weightless economy,” the meaning of the Facebook phenomenon for labor activists, and the perils of workplace surveillance, this special issue is edited by Labor & Worklife Program fellow John Hogan, University of Leeds professor Peter Nolan, and Labor & Worklife Program research director John Trumbour.
