

Dear incoming 1L,

The Harvard Law School National Lawyers Guild promotes political, economic, and social justice in the United States and abroad. Through the National Lawyers Guild, Harvard students connect with professionals, activists, and students on other campuses working on cutting-edge organizing and legal reform.

Activities the NLG is working on for next year include:

- A moot court of the Solomon Amendment case that will be heard by the Supreme Court next term (dealing with a university's right to exclude military recruiters from campus because they refuse to sign the university's nondiscrimination policy).
- A film series co-sponsored by progressive groups on campus to help us learn about each other's issues.
- Observation at immigrant detention centers in the Boston area.
- Street law workshops on employment, housing, and criminal procedure in local communities.
- Legal observing at protests.
- Talks by Michael Avery, the president of the National Lawyers Guild; Duncan Kennedy, HLS professor; Martin Stolar, a former National Lawyers Guild president currently involved in representing protesters arrested at the Republican National Convention; Lynne Stewart and her attorney, Michael Tigar; Barbara Hadsell, National Lawyers Guild vice president; and Amy Goodman of Democracy Now!
- Throwing parties with radical students and lawyers.

To join our listserve, send an email to hlsguild@law.harvard.edu. For more information about the National Lawyers Guild, check out <http://www.nlg.org>. We hope to see you next year!

Nate Ela, nela@law.harvard.edu

Beth Tossell, etossell@law.harvard.edu